

Message from Professor Robert Enright

Thank you to all educators around the world who are helping children grow in character through forgiveness education. Our scientific research has shown, in eight published studies to date, that students who receive forgiveness education are better off personally, relationally, and academically after such learning than before.

You as educators are encouraged to teach students all of the lessons for any of the curriculum guides. If you are pressed for time, please feel free to reduce the number of lessons that you teach in any given school year. Which lessons to eliminate should be your choice. Please keep in mind that if you wish to engage in electronic communication (such as Skype or email) with teachers and students in other countries, then your doing all of the lessons might facilitate the communication across cultures (because teachers in other countries likely will be teaching all of the lessons).

Finally, please note that for each grade-level curriculum guide, we have a number of different books as part of the teaching. You can do any of the following regarding these books:

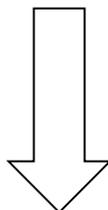

- 1) You can purchase the books for direct use in the classroom (including a book for each child if your budget permits this).
- 2) Instead of using the books themselves, you should feel free to use the summaries of the books which are included with the guides. The summaries were done by a professional writer and all of the necessary learning regarding forgiveness for any given book is included in the summaries. These summaries can save you money (no purchase of the books is necessary) and time (you can read the summaries to the students or have them read the summaries).
- 3) When you scroll down further in this document, you will see a list of Online Book Videos. These are all YouTube hotlinks to a video of an adult reading the book and showing the book pages. Not all books that are in our forgiveness curriculum guides are on-line in this way, but for those that are, this can be an inexpensive way of presenting the necessary material to the students.

May you and your students be enriched through forgiveness education.
